CLINICARE Innovates with Linux – Reduces EMR Costs for Physicians

CALGARY, May 7, 2009 – Celebrating our 25th year in business, CLINICARE Corporation is pleased to announce that its proven Practice Management Applications (PMA) and Electronic Medical Records (EMR) solutions are now available on the Red Hat Enterprise Linux platform. Traditionally certified on the powerful IBM System p (AIX) servers, offering CLINICARE's solutions on the Linux platform (IBM System x servers and others) will cost physicians significantly less.

The culmination of this development project now allows CLINICARE to offer its PMA and EMR solutions at a dramatically reduced cost for any size medical practice. Recent development efforts with Red Hat Enterprise Linux, the leading commercial-strength open source operating system, provide physicians and IT managers with the means to improve operational efficiencies and flexibility throughout their computing infrastructure.

Certified by the industry's major hardware and software vendors, Red Hat Enterprise Linux offers a flexible, high-performance operating system environment. Red Hat Enterprise Linux scales from desktop and laptop systems, small to mid-size servers, to the largest SMP servers and to mainframes.

Devin Nate, CLINICARE's Manager of Technical Services, stated "With virtualization technology coupled with the power of Red Hat Enterprise Linux, CLINICARE allows you to maximize your resources and increase deployment flexibility and application responsiveness. Think of a complete EMR solution with the flexibility to be installed on a single laptop and also scale up to the largest data centre."

According to Karim Kanji, President of CLINICARE, "I am very excited about this new development for our Company and our Customers. The fact is that we can now reach a customer base that we once thought was not reachable. We are transforming our Company and giving the market what it wants – our world-class PMA/EMR applications with our proven performance, scalability, industry standard security, and stability at an unbeatable value. Now that CLINICARE software is available on hardware running Linux, this solution costs less than ever before and is now an option for smaller medical groups - even solo and dual physician practices. We guarantee that new Customers joining us and existing Customers undergoing upgrades will make the most of their IT budgets."

CLINICARE has established a dominant position in the North American EMR marketplace and has a very satisfied and loyal following. Building on our successful 25 year history of business process experience and know-how in Canada, this Linux technology leadership will provide both current Customers and physicians considering Electronic Medical Records with both lower upfront capital and ongoing operational expense.
